Plane crashes into New Jersey home

Miraculously, no civilians were injured in the horrific accident.

A plane crashed into a house in a suburban New Jersey neighborhood Tuesday, sparking fires in at least two homes and prompting a federal investigation.

The Federal Aviation Association said a Cessna 414 crashed into a home on Berkley Avenue in Colonia at 11 a.m. Tuesday, causing it to become engulfed in flames. Fortunately, no civilians were hurt, and only the pilot was on board during the time of the crash. It wasn't immediately clear what injuries the pilot sustained, if any. The FAA and the National Transportation Safety Board said they are investigating the cause of the crash.

There were no residents in the home when the plan came crashing down from the sky, according to NBC New York, but nearby homes were damaged, with flames lapping those buildings as well.

Images taken at the site showed massive flames and plumes of smoke engulfing the idyllic home. The town's mayor, John McCormac, told local media that the plane had settled in the basement of the house.

> "Everything was just a massive blaze. I went running down. I don't know what I thought I was going to do. Anybody who was home would not have had a chance."

"Right now we don't believe any civilians on the ground were impacted by the crash, although the pilot ... nobody knows for sure yet. Nobody has gotten close to the plane," McCormac told media shortly after the crash.

The plane was reportedly headed out of Virginia en route to a small airport in Linden, New Jersey.

Visibility was said to have dropped from 10 miles to two miles shortly before the crash. A neighbor told NBC New York that he heard a low plane before the crash.

"It sounded really low, it started to sputter a little bit," the witness told the station. "All of a sudden there was this huge explosion, or just this big bang, louder than any car crash I've ever heard."

Another witness told ABC News that the explosion "lit up the sky."

"Everything was just a massive blaze. I went running down. I don't know what I thought I was going to do. Anybody who was home would not have had a chance," he said.

A neighbor shared on Facebook that he felt "incredibly lucky" to escape the catastrophe.

"We felt the thump and panicked thinking that either a truck crashed into our house or we just experienced an earthquake. ... Praying for the pilot and the families who were affected by this," he wrote.

A tree-lined residential town, Colonia is located about 20 mile outside of New York City.

Woodbridge Township, New Jersey, spokesman John Hagerty confirmed late Tuesday that the pilot did not survive the crash. His identity has not yet been confirmed.

Illegal migration at southern border a "crisis"

2 Arrests at or near the U.S. border with Mexico fell to their lowest monthly total of the year in September but the fiscal year total was up 88 percent, indicating illegal immigration remained a crisis, U.S. officials said on Tuesday. The number of apprehensions and people turned away at the border fell to 52,546 in September, less than half the peak of 144,116 in May but up 4 percent from September 2018. Migration tends to taper off during the hot summer months, but U.S. officials and immigrant advocates say the Trump administration's strict immigration policies have contributed to four straight months of fewer arrests. President Trump has made restricting immigration a centerpiece of his first term. REUTERS

Federal judge blocks Alabama abortion ban

3 A federal judge blocked Alabama on Tuesday from enforcing the strictest abortion laws in the country, saying the ban on all abortions unless a mother's health was in danger was unconstitutional. Alabama Governor Kay Ivey, a Republican, had signed the bill into law in May and it was due to come into effect on Nov. 15. A Christian, she invoked God in support of the law, saying it would protect his creation, while opponents said it came at the expense of women's health and constitutional rights. Those performing abortions would be committing a felony, punishable by up to 99 years in prison. A woman who receives an abortion would not be held criminally liable. The law makes no exceptions even for rape and incest. The American Civil Liberties Union and other groups sued to overturn the law. REUTERS

4 Russia has informed Turkey that Syrian Kurdish YPG fighters have withdrawn from a strip of land near the Syrian-Turkish border within a deadline set by Ankara and Moscow, President Tayyip Erdogan said on Tuesday. Under an accord clinched by Erdogan and Russian President Vladimir Putin a week ago, Syrian border guards and Russian military police were meant to clear all YPG forces and their weapons from a 30 km (19 mile) "safe zone" south of the border by 6 p.m. local time on Tuesday. In the next phase of the plan, Russian and Turkish forces are due to conduct joint patrols of a narrower, 10 km strip of land on the Syrian side of the border. Bilateral talks on how those patrols will work are continuing, Erdogan said. "Of course, our talks (with Russia) will continue tomorrow as before," he added. REUTERS

Former Boston College student charged in boyfriend's suicide

Suicide occurred hours before victim's graduation.

Boston College. ISTOCK

"The abuse became more frequent, more powerful and more demeaning in the days and hours leading up to Mr. Urtula's death."
Suffolk County District Attorney

A grand jury in Massachusetts has indicted a former Boston College student in the suicide of her boyfriend, whom prosecutors said she verbally, physically and psychologically abused right up to his death.

South Korean national Inyoung You, 21, was charged with involuntary manslaughter in the death of fellow Boston College student Alexander Urtula, 22, the Suffolk County District Attorney's office said in a statement on Monday.

The statement said You used her cellphone to track Urtula's location to a parking garage in the Roxbury neighborhood of Boston and was present when he leapt to his death on May 20 at around 8:35 a.m., hours before he was set to attend his graduation ceremony from the private university.

In the two months before his death, the couple exchanged more than 75,000 text messages, with You repeatedly urging Urtula to "go kill himself" and "go die," saying that she, his family and the world would be better off without him, the statement said.

An investigation showed You used attempts and threats of self-harm to control Urtula and isolate him from friends and family, the prosecutors' statement said.

"The abuse became more frequent, more powerful and more demeaning in the days and hours leading up to Mr. Urtula's death," the statement added.

You is in South Korea and authorities are cautiously optimistic she will voluntarily return to the United States, Suffolk County District Attorney Rachael Rollins told a news conference.

A biology major, Urtula was from Cedar Grove, New Jersey.

You was aware of Urtula's spiraling depression and suicidal thoughts but continued to encourage him to take his own life, the indictment said.

The events have some similarities to another Massachusetts case in which Michelle Carter, 23, was convicted of involuntary manslaughter in the 2014 death of her boyfriend, Conrad Roy, who was 18 at the time.

It was not immediately possible to contact You or establish if she had an attorney representing her.

Director Eduardo Sanchez on 20 years of 'Blair Witch' and his new film, 'Portals'

"Ingenuity almost has to come from the independent world."

PAT KING

PROVIDED

In many ways, Eduardo Sanchez is one of the most important horror directors of the past twenty years. When he and his team of collaborators unleashed the film "The Blair Witch Project" out into the world in the summer of 1999, it became a cultural phenomenon and spawned countless "found footage" horror films that have become a staple of the genre. He has worked tirelessly since then to find new ways to scare audiences and got behind the camera as a part of the new anthology horror film, "Portals," released in select theaters and On Demand last weekend.

The new film follows several different stories revolving around mysterious rectangular black holes that appear all around the world and cause those who encounter them to act erratic and dangerously when they come face-to-face with them. Different directors, such as Gregg Hale and Liam O'Donnell, wrote and directed scenes for the film, much like indie-horror anthology series, "V/H/S." Sanchez first tried his hand in this style with the second installment of that franchise and got into the fun and mischievous spirit.

"The whole point of the fun that we had on 'V/H/S 2' and the fun that we had on this one is that there is kind of a foundational construct. But they pretty much let you do what you want to do as long as it doesn't interfere with the other stories. They did a very good job at figuring out where all of the stories fit together. Especially for anthologies, you need to get in there and get out. You don't have a lot of time for character development and explaining the entire crazy story. It has to be a simple story," says Sanchez. "We wanted to introduce it and bring the question to the audience. What would you do if this happened? What would you do if something mysterious like this appeared in your room or in your workplace?"

That kind of "anything goes" attitude was something that connected with audiences when Sanchez first came onto the scene 20 years ago with "Blair Witch."

Director Eduardo Sanchez. GETTY IMAGES

I ask if Sanchez has been able to feel the importance of the big bang that movie set off all of those years ago.

"I never thought I would make a movie that would have such an impact or staying power. It's hard to talk about it because it's hard to stay humble and real about it because, for us, we made that movie like we make every other movie. We put our heart and soul into it and it just happened with this movie that the planets aligned. It's still a big part of our lives and I'm super grateful for that," says Sanchez as he reminisces about the film's legacy.

For as big of a seismic shift that film created after its release, Sanchez believes that all of the most influential horror films have come from those who have created out in the fringes, and that the indie scene is as thriving as it has ever been.

"The thing about the horror genre," explains Sanchez, "is the ingenuity almost has to come from the independent world. Once you get into studio filmmaking, even low budget studio filmmaking, there are rules that you have to follow. Unless you're Jordan Peele or James Wan who can basically do what they want in the horror genre now. There are very few filmmakers like that. A lot of ingenuity has to come from those who don't have anybody telling them 'you can't do that.' For 'Blair Witch,' we tried to sell that movie but nobody would let us into their offices to pitch that movie. It has to come from people putting together money and going out there and shooting it. You almost have to have nothing to lose to do what George Romero did, or John Carpenter did or what we did. Not to compare us with George Romero and John Carpenter! The really good nuggety and juicy stuff is going to come from the indie world. There's less rules. For me, horror is all about pushing the envelope and crossing the line. Once you get mainstream, it gets harder to cross that line."

Director David Michod on re-working Shakespeare for 'The King'

The new film starring Timothee Chalamet will be available on Netflix this weekend.

PAT KING

It can be a pretty tall order for any filmmaker to adapt the words of Shakespeare to the screen. Australian director David Michod and his writing partner, actor Joel Edgerton, both understood that while making the new war epic, "The King," starring both Edgerton and Timothee Chalamet as the young king. Their film borrows from the immortal bard's famous play "Henry V" while they made sure to add their own touches and nods to history.

"Well, when Joel and I first started talking about it, it was obviously, initially, through the prism of Shakespeare," says Michod. "Because, you know, the greatest writer in the history of the language had stepped so firmly over that territory before that it's almost impossible for us, impossible for anyone these days, to think about Henry V without thinking about Shakespeare's 'Henry V.'"

This story of an idealist who eventually gets his shot at power is one that has been told many times throughout history with credit owed to the endurance of Shakespeare's words. It was a story both Edgerton and Michod had been wanting to tell ever since Edgerton had cut his teeth playing the role of Falstaff on stage in Sydney.

"It was almost like a career-forming experience for him; it was a much talked about performance," Michod remembers. "It was a defining moment for him. And so I think it loomed large for him, all these years later. We started talking about it and realized that the movie version of what we might want to do would have to be different, because the plays are written, they're extraordinary things to read, but they're written to be performed, to be presented on an Elizabethan stage. Unless you treat that in a very particular, formal way, I don't think it makes for the kind of cinema that I would want to make."

In the past, filmmakers and theater companies have presented this story and the conflicts between the British and the French during this time period in a more bombastic and heroic light. This glorification of war was something both Edgerton and Michod wanted to avoid.

"In order to make this film today, it felt necessary that we engineer it in that way. The play, 'Henry V,' especially, was written in a very different time. [It] has been presented in the past, very frequently, as a heroic story of great English triumph. It felt really inappropriate for us to make that version of it today," says Michod.

"And so instead, we became very interested in the idea of generating a different story, a different interpretation of 'Henry V' that would be more about how a young idealistic man might find himself consumed by the institutions."

The idealistic young man they found to play Hal, of course, is Chalamet, who delivers a profound performance that perfectly encapsulates the young King's transition from innocence towards being drunk on power.

"I really loved the idea of taking that kid from 'Call Me by Your Name' and plunking him in the beginning of this movie. You suddenly wind the clock back 600 years and there you are," laughs Michod. "But then there is a change and then the the great burden of responsibility descends upon him. And, in a way, our version of 'Henry V' becomes like a kind of making-of-a-tyrant story. There was something really exciting to me about the idea of taking that kid from 'Call Me by Your Name' and turning him into a tyrant."

Aside from these narrative choices, one thing that sets the film apart from other medieval war epics is that Michod went to great lengths to make the viewer truly feel the panic-inducing and claustrophobic nature of these skirmishes.

"From the outset, I was thinking about what version of that movie would I make? And it was something that, my version was one that hopefully felt earthy and real and human and ... otherworldly," said Michod of the film's intense center-of-the-action approach to combat.

"Who knows what 600 years ago felt like? That extended to the battle. So when Hal has his one-on-one fight with Hotspur, I wanted that not to be about super fancy sword play, I wanted it to be about two kids wearing trash cans, smashing the sh-t out of each other, heaving for breath and rolling around on the ground."

"And then when we got to the battle, it felt important to me that you be able to follow characters through it. And I wanted to make sure that I shot the whole thing from human eye level, rather than with drones and cranes. And I wanted it to feel like you were in the claustrophobic panic attack of that kind of hand-to-hand war," he says. "It felt like that when we were shooting it, especially with Timmy's fight in the battle ... it was frightening for me behind the camera, because it felt dangerous! I felt like I was watching Timmy, the actor, just trying to stay alive, because there are too many moving parts. There are too many stunt guys slipping around in the mud, wearing helmets they can't see through properly, and in the middle of it is our leading man. And I've got to make sure he doesn't die."

Brady still elite in Year 20

Tom Brady has the Patriots right back in the driver's seat for a Super Bowl title.

MATT BURKE
matthew.burke@metro.us

This could very well be Tom Brady's final season in Foxboro.

You've heard all the rumors.

"He's going to join his buddy Mike Vrabel in Tennessee."

"He's going to Chicago to put the Bears over the top."

"Gisele wants to live in L.A., so he's going to go home to California to put the Chargers over the top."

All of this is conjecture, of course, and it's a good bet that Brady himself doesn't even know what he's going to do yet.

Brady is simply focused on the task at hand, which is navigating the undefeated Pats through the next five games. The Patriots opponents' through Dec. 8 (at Ravens, at Eagles, vs. Cowboys, at Texans, vs. Chiefs) have a combined record of 23-15 and all have high hopes for the postseason.

Numbers don't lie

Many are saying that Brady is slipping at age 42, but the numbers don't really bear that out.

The Patriots are first in the NFL in points scored per game at 31.2.

Brady is on pace to throw 26 touchdown passes this year, which would surpass the 25 he threw in 2013 (he threw 29 last year).

He is on pace to throw eight interceptions this season, which would be on par with the eight he threw two years ago during his MVP year (he threw 11 last year).

He is also on pace to throw for 4,502 yards, which would be more than the 4,355 yards he threw last season.

The eye test hasn't been great this year on Brady, truth be told. There was that horrible pick he threw in the end zone in Buffalo, and more recently against the Browns there was that ugly missed dump-off to Mohamed Sanu in which the wet ball slipped out of his hands just seconds after CBS' Tony Romo praised Brady for how great of a bad weather QB he was.

But, all told, the first eight games of Brady's 2019 season match up pretty well with the first eight games he's had in each season for the past 15 years or so.

Mutual admiration

Most of these "Brady is leaving" rumors stem from the fact that TB12 was upset with the way his contract negotiations went this past August. The Patriots don't want to lock him up for two or three years, but Brady likely craves the security.

It seems, though, that Brady and Bill Belichick are doing a pretty good job of leaving business as business. It's not affecting the way the two interact when it comes to football matters.

In fact, recent reports have suggested that Brady and Belichick's on-field relationship is as good as it's been in years.

Brady was also very appreciative of the fact that Belichick gave him the game ball following the team's win over the Giants as Brady passed Peyton Manning on the all-time passing yards list.

This is the third time that Tom Brady has led the Patriots to an 8-0 start. The previous two times came in 2007 and 2015.

And when Belichick notched career coaching win No. 300 this past Sunday, Brady waxed poetic about the man he believes to be the "greatest football coach of all-time."

"It's a privilege to play for him," Brady said. "He's taught me so much on and off the field. He's been a great mentor for me. I'm just proud of him and everything he's accomplished. Amazing to think he coached for another place and they didn't think he was good enough."

Grading the Patriots' defense on a curve

Bill Belichick despises all the smoke that is being blown up his defense's keister right now, and he will surely be dishing out some humble pie this week. "Mr. 300" knows that, as otherworldly as the defense has been this season, they haven't exactly been playing the Peyton Manning Colts in terms of offensive challenges, and they have shown a propensity to give up a big play from time to time.

The Patriots' defense has produced four touchdowns this season. ALL GETTY IMAGES

Bills running back Frank Gore put the first dent into the Patriots' shield in Week 4 when he galloped for a 41-yard gain. The next week, the Redskins' Steven Sims took an end-around 65 yards for a touchdown. The Giants' Golden Tate then broke the Pats' code four days later on that Thursday nighter when he hauled in a 64-yard TD grab from Daniel Jones.

And this past week against the Browns, running back Nick Chubb dashed for a 44-yard gain.

So far the Pats' defense has limited these big plays to just one per game.

Giving up two or three big plays in a game, of course, could spell doom.

With the likes of Lamar Jackson, Carson Wentz, Ezekiel Elliott, Deshaun Watson and Patrick Mahomes on deck, you can bet that Belichick will be tightening up the screws.

Aries Look at the broader scope of a situation and expand your knowledge and plans. A move or personal change is supported. A partnership looks promising.

Taurus Implement change. It's up to you to strive to make your dreams come true. A meaningful relationship should be instrumental to helping you reach your goal. Romance is on the rise.

Gemini Someone will send you mixed messages regarding a relationship. When in doubt, ask direct questions. It's best to find out exactly where you stand before you become too friendly.

Cancer Personal gains can be made, along with physical improvements and professional progress. Your innovative way of handling responsibilities will give you the edge you need to get ahead. Romance is on the rise.

Leo If you express your intentions, you will get the feedback you need to forge ahead. Opportunity knocks, and though not everyone will be happy with your choices, what's right for you should take precedence.

Virgo Don't let emotions overwhelm you. A practical outlook will help you overcome any pitfall you face. Moderation will ward off a costly mistake. Romance is encouraged, but don't overspend on a loved one.

Libra Size up a personal situation and make financial adjustments that will help ease stress and lower your overhead. Learn from the experience and save for the future.

Scorpio An open mind and a keen imagination will bring about positive change. If you tighten your relationship with people who can help you achieve your dreams, new opportunities will sprout.

Sagittarius Enthusiasm can be useful, but don't be gullible. Someone's rags-to-riches tale may sound exciting, but don't buy into someone else's dream. Stick to what you know.

Capricorn A steady pace will lead to a positive change. If you let anxiety surface, it will hinder what you are trying to achieve.

Aquarius Look at your schedule, finances and responsibilities before you make promises. Concentrate on gaining more stability and long-term security. Don't let anyone take you for granted.

Pisces Go over agreements and make adjustments. Equality will be the deciding factor as to the outcome and longevity of a partnership. Honesty and transparency are mandatory. EUGENIA LAST
